The International Commission on Occupational Health (ICOH) is an international professional organization dedicated to scientific progress, knowledge, and development of occupational health and safety.

Founded in 1906 in Milan, Italy, ICOH currently has over 2,000 members in 93 countries. ICOH is recognized by the United Nations as non-governmental organization and has a close working relationship with the International Labour Organization, World Health Organization, International Security Association, International Ergonomics Association, and International Occupational Hygiene Association. ICOH hold International Congresses on occupational health, and its official languages are English and French.

ICOH's Purposes: to enhance the knowledge of members in the field of occupational health.

- To generate and disseminate scientific knowledge in occupational health.
- To support and promote use of knowledge in occupational health practice and in training.
- To promote and maintain the highest standards of moral and professional commitment to the health and safety of workers and their families.

Benefits for ICOH members:

- Substantial reduction of the registration fee of the triennial International Congresses and some other ICOH-sponsored conferences.
- Reductions of the subscription rates of international scientific journals (20-30%), in the price of all ILO publications (50%) and on all WHO information products (40%).
- Participation in the activities of up to three of the 37 scientific committees as well as submit materials for publication in the Newsletter.

ICOH Accomplishments

ICOH activities cover a wide range of topics, as reflected by the 37 ICOH Scientific Committees and 3 Collaborative Networks. Some of these aim at chemical, physical or ergonomic exposures; other take up health issues, services and methods in different occupational branches, still others focus on accident and disease prevention, and more recently work organization and psychosocial factors, and unemployment and health.
